Even when the change will ultimately be positive, the process of getting there can be a challenge for individuals and teams. Change is part of the human experience, yet very few of us have been taught how to understand it or deal with it effectively. For leaders, navigating change is about understanding how people think, feel and behave in the midst of change and showing those you lead how to get to the other side. During this interactive session, Erin O. Crosby will introduce you to the Change Cycle, a human-centered cognitive approach to change management. Backed up by neuro-science, we will discuss how to move yourself and others through the stages of change as experienced by the human brain. So, whether you’re navigating the realities of a promotion, taking a leap of faith and starting your own business, or moving your family to a new city, this session will equip you to handle the ups and downs of professional and personal change.
